The fact that most Americans live in urban areas does not mean that they reside in the center of large cities. In fact, more Americans live in the suburbs of large metropolitan areas than in the cities themselves.

The Bureau of Census regards any area with more than 2500 people as an urban area, and does not consider boundaries of cities and suburbs. According to the Bureau, the political boundaries are less significant than the social and economic relationships and the transportation and communication systems that integrate a locale. An MSA, which stands for Metropolitan Statistical Area, is any area that contains a city and its surrounding suburbs and has a total population of 50, 000 or more.

In addition, the Bureau recognizes eighteen megapolises, that is, continuous adjacent metropolitan areas. In the Eastern Corridor, as it is called, a population of 45 million inhabitants is concentrated.

London has traffic problems that seem to get worse and worse year by year. Tom Jenkins, a London bus driver, was asked what he would do to improve the current situation of the city if he was put in charge of London transport. He said that if he were in charge of London transport, he'd make some changes. He'd ban private cars from the centre of London between 7:30 am and 6:30 pm except for someone living in the area. Besides, nearby railway stations in outskirts of London he would build a lot of new and cheap parking systems where people could leave their cars for traveling to work by trains. Also, he'd fix a standard of fare for all bus or tube journeys in the center and make it possible for anyone to buy ten or a dozen of tickets at one time so that buses and taxis could move much more quickly and easily and certainly life would become more comfortable for everyone".
